Biodegradability Tests have also been performed with accompanying reports

DEFINITIONS

Biodegradability – this is a process where the material breaks down into smaller and smaller particles and re-integrates into the environment. It is not claiming that the material will be absorbed or adsorbed into soil nutrients. The process of breaking down the material is through sunlight (UV rays breaking the chemical bonds in the plastic material) and temperature/ environmental changes (humidity – moisture, heat and ice, weathering, etc.)

Compostability is the process of breaking down and returning the material into a soil or soil nutrients. The bamboo fibre and plant based chemicals will break down.
